Nursing Infant Industries

The announcement of the establishing of a copper leaching plant at Luning brings to mind the fact that this furnishes an opportunity for the railroad to study what is to their best interest in furthering industrial development of southern Nevada. One industry brings another, and a considerable addition to the revenues of the local railroads is in sight if the managers find they can make a substantial reduction in the cost of freight on materials necessary to successful operation. The leaching process demands a large supply of sulphur. This may be obtained from the vast deposits at Capeta, which lie outdoors in perfect mountains, but which are of little or no value to the owners for want of a low freight rate. To move the sulphur to the coast for shipment to manufacturing points would be impossible, as it would come into competition with the product of Sicily, which is favored by a low rate that cannot be met from this part of the country. Sulphur comes from Sicily in ballast, or at a cost that scarcely pays the expense of loading and unloading, and is favored by a low tariff. This condition applies more directly to the Atlantic coast, where large quantities are consumed in the production of paper. To a limited extent it also applies to vessels coming along the West to take out grain cargoes. They load whatever they can and at any old price, as they have to make their charters from some of the Pacific ports for the Orient or the long return voyage to European distributing centers. That is the most powerful argument against the economical development of sulphur and other industrial minerals that are found in such profusion in Nevada. However, in the case of the Luning proposition, the distance from the sulphur mines to the furnace is comparatively short and, with a low rate based on a guaranteed tonnage, it seems to the men who are putting their money into the leaching plant that some concessions could be made that would be mutually profitable to both parties.

Then there is the question of fuel. The coal measures of Coaldale have been opened sufficiently to establish the fact that they can produce coal in commercial quantities. Even the low-grade product from the mines at Coaldale could be utilized at three proposed furnaces, and it would be to the advantage of the railroad to guarantee the requirements of the new measures with the object of finding to what extent they can accommodate them with a special rate.

Operation of the smelter at Thompson, in the Mason valley, demonstrated the efficacy of a low rate on ore in stimulating business. The Southern Pacific gave the Thompson smelter the benefit of an extremely low rate, which enabled prospectors in Mineral county to go ahead and raise funds in the process of development to furnish the shows of war for conducting further exploration and raising several properties from the prospect to the producing stage.

Gold in India

For many years the drain of gold to British India has created alarm in the financial centers of Europe. At one time it was hoped that improved business conditions in the east would teach the natives to invest their money or, at least, deposit it in banks at interest instead of hoarding it, but no signs of this change are apparent. It is practically impossible to get at the exact amount of gold imported by India, but statistics do show that the net imports of British gold coin into that country within the last twelve years have amounted to more than $283,000,000.

A novel theory to explain at least a part of this loss of gold has been propounded by M. R. S. Tyer, secretary of the Madras Economic Association and a banker of wide experience, who has studied the situation in British India very closely during the last fifteen years. He has come to the conclusion that gold is hoarded or turned into heavy jewelry and given by natives to their wives and daughters, because under the present law a Hindu cannot either by will or gift make any provision for his wife, daughters or other members of his family that will hold good after his death, because when a native has a son that son acquires an interest in his father's property that cannot be alienated.

Mr. Tyer says that this law has been construed so strictly by the Indian judges in favor of the man as against the woman that it can only be evaded by giving the women of the family jewelry, which is regarded as personal property and therefore cannot be claimed by the male heirs after the head of the family has died. As this ancient law here a very strong resemblance to the law of primogeniture in England, the English rulers of India have never tried to change it or to educate the natives up to better things.

Belmont earnings for September show no diminution. The country is making the most of the North Star fiasco, but that does not influence values where old reliable producers are concerned. They are keeping up their batting average.

St. Louis will feel the loss of Adolphus Busch in more ways than one. He was the chief mainspring of that city's activities, and whenever money was wanted to head a subscription list Busch was there with his signature. Those on the inside of the St. Louis exposition know that had it not been for the energy and financial management of the deceased brewer it is more than likely that the big show would not have been getting off.

The old custom of giving away vegetables for half a century has gone to the wall in the light of modern warfare. They are getting on the spot, and although not so well advertised as the temperance and Thrift, they have the advantage that not a word has been said in the last twenty-five years. These farmers of the west go to the principle that it is better to make haste slowly by sending the goods to the dump.

Newsdays is coming to southern Nevada. Does this imply that he is afraid of the voters in the Phoenix hallway? If he believes that idea he should come quickly and interview the men affected by tariff reform and he will find how weak a game he has to contend with in building up a machine.

PLATINUM ORES COME FROM TWO STATES

RARE METAL PRODUCTION IS DRAWN FROM CALIFORNIA AND OREGON.

While the high price of platinum in the United States in 1932 encouraged prospecting for this rare metal, the production for that year was but slightly larger than that of the preceding year. According to David T. Day, of the United States Geological Survey, in an advance report from Mineral Resources for 1933 on the production of platinum and allied metals, recently published by the survey, the output of crude platinum in 1932 was 721 ounces, compared to 629 ounces in 1931. With the exception of a small yield from the New Rambler copper mines, in Albany county, Wyoming, the entire domestic production came from California and Oregon. The greater part of the California platinum was obtained as a byproduct in gold dredging in Butte, Yuba, Sacramento and Colusa counties.

The United States supply comes chiefly from the unmanufactured and manufactured platinum imported directly from Russia. In addition, 45,230 ounces of platinum sand were imported into the United States in 1932, which by the usual estimate of 86 per cent fine metal, would yield 3,894 ounces of refined platinum. In all, the refined platinum produced in domestic refineries from both domestic and foreign sources amounted to approximately 38,229 fine ounces, valued at $3,722,121, compared with 29,140 fine ounces similarly obtained in 1931. The total value of our platinum importations in 1932—both raw material and manufactured products—was $4,580,682, against $4,366,207 in 1931.

A copy of the report may be obtained free on application to the director of the geological survey at Washington, D. C.
